When they come to Belgrade, they will form a little Fleet of 12 Ships of War, by the Addition of four of 50 Guns each which were built here in 1737, called the Imperial Eagle, the Lyon, the Sea-Horse, and the Triton, and three others built at Belgrade. They are all well mann'd with Voluntier Seamen from several Parts, and Officers chosen for their Experience in Naval Service, and have on board a considerable Number of Imperial Marines; as also of Gunners and Mariners furnished by the Order of Malta, which Order has also furnished a Body of Horse to serve in Hungary this Campaign. The said Fleet carries 512 Pieces of Cannon and 24 Mortars, and a strong Detachment of Soldiers, among them one Battallion of the Regiment of Pallavicini. The Tyger and the Cerberus, being the least of the Fleet, have a double Range of a kind of Bayonets lying flat all along the upper Part of the Sides of each Ship, which in Case of Action can be instantly raised and pointed in a due Position to keep off the Enemy from Boarding.
